

AUTHOR'S REPLY

I would like to thank Dr Sachithanandan⁽¹⁾ for the comments made on my article.⁽²⁾ I appreciate and agree wholeheartedly with the concerns expressed. As pointed out by the author, there is currently a high ratio of interns to specialist supervisors and a plethora of medical schools. There is an urgent need to find innovative ways to incorporate some of the suggested improvements in order to provide adequate exposure and hands-on experience in the undergraduate medical curriculum.

Yours sincerely,

Chan Sook Ching

Universiti Kuala Lumpur - Royal College of Medicine Perak, Ipoh 30450, Malaysia. csching@rcmp.unkl.edu.my

REFERENCES

1. Sachithanandan A. Malaysian internship a reflection of undergraduate training: time to go back to basics. Singapore Med J 2012; 53:364.
2. Chan SC. Views of Malaysian interns and their supervisors on the adequacy of undergraduate clinical skills training. Singapore Med J 2012; 53:196-202.